National Epilepsy Awareness Month Epilepsy, characterized by recurrent, unprovoked seizures, affects about 2 million people in the United States. Delayed recognition of these seizures and inadequate treatment increase the risk for additional seizures, disability, decreased quality of life, and, in rare instances, death.

National Novel Writing Month You can write a novel in only a month, along with the 600,000+ people who've already done so. Go to www.nanowrimo.org for advice, support, and a network of fellow authors working diligently on the next Great American (or any other nationality) Novel.

National Runaway Prevention Month A campaign by the National Network for Youth to increase public awareness of the issues facing runaways and to educate the public about the solutions, and about the role they can play in preventing youth from running away.

Manatee Awareness Month The manatee is the official marine mammal of Florida, a gentle, slow-moving animal protected by the Federal Endangered Species Act as well as Florida state law. But manatees face the risk of extinction due to human activity, including the loss of their warm water winter habitat. For more information, go to the Save the Manatee Club website at www.savethemanatee.org.

Robots taking our jobs? Maybe not

The robots are coming. Surprisingly, even though they're replacing workers in many areas, they may not be driving down the number of jobs humans do.

A survey of more than 2,000 HR and hiring pros conducted by CareerBuilder and Economic Modeling Specialists found 21 percent of employers overall (and 30 percent of those with more than 500 people in their workforce) had automated at least some jobs. However, 68 percent of the employers said that adopting new technologies had resulted in new positions being added to their organizations, and 35 percent said they had ended up hiring more people. And 35 percent of organizations that replaced workers with machines said they ultimately hired people back because the technology didn't produce the results needed.

Whether we have it all or we have nothing, we are all faced with the same obstacles: sadness, loss, illness, dying and death. If we are to strive as human beings to gain more wisdom, more kindness and more compassion, we must have the intention to grow as a lotus and open each petal one by one.

—Goldie Hawn

Life on the moon?

Scientists may have a new place to look for ancient fossils: the moon. Physicists at the University of Kent in the United Kingdom have developed a process that tests the potential effects of a rock from Earth hitting the moon. The Science Daily website described the experiment:

- Step 1: The research team took a rock containing some fossils, ground it up, then mixed it with water and froze it to simulate a meteoroid.
- Step 2: They fired the frozen rock into a bag of water using a gas-powered gun that replicated the force of an object being launched into orbit; the water impact imitated the effect of crashing into the moon.
- Step 3: That's in the future, but the experiment shows that someday we might find the remains of prehistoric life from Earth in rocks from the moon.

Keep working safely when cold weather comes

With winter on the way, you and your co-workers need to take extra steps to stay safe when working and commuting in cold weather. Think warm thoughts and follow these guidelines:

- Dress in layers. You want to dress warmly enough for all conditions. Layers allow you to remove excess clothing if you begin to sweat, or add clothes if temperatures drop.
- Stay covered. Make sure your skin and face are fully covered in subzero temperatures to avoid frostbite. Wear goggles to protect your eyes.
- Invest in long underwear. If you'll be outside for any extended period of time, get long underwear that will pull sweat and moisture away from your skin.
- Wear mittens. Your hands will stay warmer if your fingers aren't separated. If you have to switch from mittens to gloves for certain tasks, do it quickly. Fingers are very susceptible to frostbite because they're far from your body's center.

The ache for home lives in all of us. The safe place where we can go as we are and not be questioned.

—Maya Angelou

Happy Thanksgiving! Avoid stress with this advice

Thanksgiving is a time for family togetherness. Of course, sometimes too much togetherness breeds tension, stress, arguments, and the occasional blowup. Whether you're hosting the dinner or just visiting, remember these tips for staying calm and sane:

- Plan early. Start thinking about Thanksgiving well before the big day so you don't have to rush to get everything done at the last minute. Check in with guests, or your host, a few days ahead of time to confirm everyone's plans.
- Get people involved. Don't try to do all the work yourself. Invite guests to bring dishes (if you're a guest, volunteer). Recruit your kids to set the table and clear away the dishes. A team effort will make the day more fun for everyone.

Horses can't talk, but they do communicate—with each other

No one can talk to a horse, of course (as the theme song for TV's Mr. Ed tells us), but horses can communicate with each other. Not by talking, but with their eyes and ears.

Scientists at the University of Sussex have observed that ear position is an important visual signal that horses see and respond to. In a study, they posted life-sized photographs of horses between two feeding buckets. The photo would show which bucket the horse was watching. As part of the test, the scientists blocked physical cues from the pictures, particularly views of the eyes and ears.

Their findings indicated that horses depend on the orientation of other horses' heads to locate food, an ability they lose when those cues aren't visible. The results seem to dispute the common theory that animals whose eyes are on the sides of their heads can't pick up information based on the direction of each other's heads.

News flash: Superman violates the laws of physics

We all know that the comic book hero Superman gets his powers from the yellow of our sun; after all, his home planet of Krypton had a red sun (before the world was destroyed). But how much energy would he really need to perform his feats of derring-do?

Two University of Leicester students examined that question in a paper for the Journal of Physics Special Topics. Estimating the area of his body, the students determined that Superman would probably be able to absorb some 1,096 joules of energy per second from our sun. They then calculated that to fly for eight hours at an altitude of 30 kilometers, our hero would require 207 billion joules to overcome drag forces and gravity. That means Superman's solar efficiency would have to reach over 600,000 percent (Earth's best solar cells have a 44.7 percent efficiency), which indicates that he would use more energy flying "up, up, and away!" than he could get from the sun—a violation of the laws of physics (specifically, the law of conservation of energy).

The students theorize that Superman must have either an alternate energy source or the ability to store up energy for future flights. Others might speculate that these guys have way too much time on their hands.

Anecdotes

The road best traveled

A queen had a great highway built for her kingdom. Before it was opened, she decided to have a contest. She told her people that whoever traveled a mile on the highway the best would receive a box of gold.

On the day of the contest, many subjects showed up. Some drove fine chariots, others rode their most handsome horses, and some walked in their best shoes.

About a half mile from the starting place, though, they all came across a pile of rocks that forced them off the road and through the mud. When they reached the finish line, they all complained to the queen about the obstacle.

Then a beggar hobbled up to the end of the route, carrying a heavy box. “Excuse me, your majesty,” he said. “I found this on the road. Maybe you could find the person it belongs to?”

“Where did you find this box, old man?” the queen asked.

“It was beneath a pile of rocks in the middle of the highway. I stopped as I was walking to clear them away, and found this at the bottom.”

The queen told him to open the box, and the beggar was delighted to find it filled with gold. “But why?” he asked.

“The person who travels the highway the best,” the queen told the beggar and her people, “is the one who improves it for the next traveler.”

Manager’s Mentor

Ask effective questions to empower your workforce

The best way to empower your employees is to ask questions that spur their curiosity and creativity. Here are some techniques:

- Challenge the conventional wisdom. Ask questions that move people away from the tried-and-true and help them think more creatively. For example: “What if we give our product away to every 10th caller on Tuesdays?”
- Change the perspective. Pose questions that take a higher view of a problem—that encourage people to think of the long term or the broader implications. “How will this change affect the competition? What will happen to the marketplace as a result?”
